All day

Plaza de Armas de Santiago

The Plaza de Armas de Santiago is considered the heart of the capital of Chile, marking the milestone known as Kilometer Zero, from which the distance between the different cities of the country begins to be measured. In its surroundings not only emblematic buildings converge, symbols of the origin of the city and witnesses of its development of more than four centuries, but also characteristic characters that fill this space with life. The plaza was laid out by the architect Pedro de Gamboa. The Municipality, the Central Post Office, the National Historical Museum and the Metropolitan Cathedral were installed around it. Since its establishment it has been the social heart of Santiago, without ever losing its status as the center of citizen life and undisputed heritage and tourist icon of the capital.

Cerro Santa Lucia

Cerro Santa Lucía is one of the most visited public green areas in the capital. It is a silent witness of the growth of the city of Santiago since the Spanish conquerors arrived in the Mapocho Valley on December 13, 1540. You can find an original Spanish coat of arms, a mythical bell that used to belong to the Church of the Company of Jesus, a museum, telescopes, swings and a beautiful merry-go-round here. Streetlights, statues, fountains and vases were brought from Europe to ornament and embellish the place.
