Day 2

Lhasa city tour

All day

Lhasa, situated in southwestern China, serves as the political, economic, cultural, scientific, and educational center of Tibet, as well as a sacred site for Tibetan Buddhism. At an elevation of 3,650 meters, Lhasa enjoys over 3,000 hours of annual sunshine, earning its reputation as the "City of Sunshine." Today we visit the Potala Palace atop Mapori Hill (Red Mountain), comprising two main sections: the White Palace where successive Dalai Lamas administered and resided, and the Red Palace housing religious halls and stupa tombs. The White Palace encircling the Red Palace exemplifies Tibet's former theocratic system. Next we explore Jokhang Temple – a

1,300-year-old monastery of supreme significance in Tibetan Buddhism. As Tibet's most splendid extant Tubo-period architecture, it features the region's earliest rammed-earth-and-timber structure and established the prototype for Tibetan monastic layouts. Finally we stroll through Barkhor Street, originally a single pilgrim path encircling Jokhang Temple called the "Holy Path" by Tibetans, now evolved into an expansive traditional quarter surrounding the temple.

Morning

Potala Palace

It was built in the 7th century AD, more than 1,300 years ago. King Songtsen Gampo of Tibet built a nine-story palace with 1,000 rooms in order to marry Princess Wencheng of the Tang Dynasty. The main building is 117 meters high, with a total of 13 floors, including palaces, pagoda halls, Buddhist halls, sutra halls, monks' residences, courtyards, etc. The entire palace has a distinctive Tibetan style. It is majestic and is built on the mountain. It is the winter palace residence of the Dalai Lama of all generations and the political and religious ruling center of Tibet.

Afternoon

Jokhang Temple

The Jokhang Temple combines Tibetan, Tang, Nepalese and Indian architectural styles and has become an eternal model of Tibetan religious architecture. In front of the temple, incense is lingering all day long, with deep impressions on the body and long head, and thousands of butter lamps are always bright, leaving traces of time and pilgrims.

Activity time: 1Hour30Minute

Afternoon

Barkhor Street

Barkhor Street, also known as Bajiao Street located in Lhasa, Tibet. The street is a well known ancient street representing the culture and folk customs of Tibet. While walking on the street, you can experience what life was like in the past, and experience the food and culture of natives to Lhasa. You can view and learn things from traditional dress, and dances, to traditional meals, to the architecture of the town itself, which has been well preserved throughout the years. Barkhor Street is a must-visit location to experience in Lhasa.

Day 3

Lhasa - Vehicle - Yamdrok Yumtso - Vehicle - Lhasa

All day

This morning we visit Norbulingka—the "Jewel Park"—renowned as Tibet's largest, most scenic man-made garden with the richest historical relics. Its architectural philosophy embraces natural topography: elevating terraces on heights, excavating ponds in depressions, prioritizing vistas. Next, journey to Yamdrok Lake, one of Tibet's three sacred lakes. As the largest enclosed freshwater lake on the southern Qinghai-Tibet Plateau, it sits at 4,441 meters elevation with an average depth of 23.6 meters. Its staggering water volume of approximately 16 billion cubic meters ultimately flows into the Yarlung Tsangpo River, nourishing the land. Finally, return to Lhasa.

Afternoon

Yamdrok Yumtso

Yamdrok Lake, which means "Swan Pond" in Tibetan, is one of the three sacred lakes in Xizang. It is also called Yamdrok Lake (locals usually call it "Yam Lake"), because "co" in Tibetan means "lake". Geographically, it belongs to Langkazi County in Shannan Prefecture. The lake surface is 4,441 meters above sea level, the total length of the lakeshore is 250 kilometers, the total area is 638 square kilometers, and the lake water is 20-40 meters deep. It is the largest inland lake in the northern foothills of the Himalayas. There are many forks in Yamdrok Lake, like coral branches, so it is also called "the upper coral lake" in Tibetan.
