Chichén Itzá

As the best-preserved Mayan city-state ruins in the world, this ancient capital of the Mayan Empire, which was excavated in 514 AD, has many beautiful ancient buildings, such as the Castillo Pyramid, the Cuju Ball Court, the Warrior Temple, the Oval Observatory, etc. Whether it is the architectural style, artistic attainments, religious concepts, or scientific achievements, they are all breathtaking, attracting countless scholars and tourists to come and admire. Among them, the Quetzalcoatl Pyramid is listed as one of the new seven wonders of the world. The locals worship a kind of sacred bird that is believed to come from heaven, so they specially designed such steps to create an echo similar to the sound of a bird, as if they were talking to the gods. If you come here, you might as well try to clap your hands facing the pyramid and you can hear this echo.

Cenote Ik-Kil

Ik Kil is a cenote outside Pisté in the Tinúm Municipality, Yucatán, Mexico. The cenote is open to the sky with the water level about 26 meters (85 ft) below ground level. There is a carved stairway that leads down to a swimming platform. Ik Kil was considered sacred by the Mayans who used the site as a location for human sacrifice to their rain god, Chaac.

Suytun cenote

A thin bluestone path extends into a turquoise pool. This is the internet-famous patio "Suiton" that has been liked thousands of times on "Little Red Book" and Instagram. It is not very big, but its unique landscape makes people want to come here to take pictures. It is an Aguadas limestone pit. Its natural beauty is breathtaking. The stone piers in the stone kiln make it look so mysterious. The water in the pool is relatively shallow compared to the towering stone walls. It is like a huge open church. The crack in the ceiling of the church is the best wealth and highlight of the entire "Suiton Patio". It is in an almost perfect position, and the light shines right in the center of the natural well. If the air is humid or there is some dust in the air, that is the best effect for taking pictures. Standing at the end of the bluestone path in the cave, in the middle of the patio, a beam of light shines directly from the top, like an angel's arms embracing you.

Xcaret Park

Located on the Caribbean coast, Xcaret Theme Park was originally a Mayan site. Later, it was discovered that there were several underground rivers with clear water like jade. It became an instant hit and became one of the world's famous tourist destinations. The park has more than 40 attractions suitable for all ages, making it an ideal place for family travel! In the park, you can not only swim in underground rivers, explore mysterious caves, walk on jungle trails, and see animals that live in the park: deer, jaguars, flamingos and other exotic birds; you can also discover new colors in the butterfly house and discover the mysteries of the ocean in the coral reef aquarium. There are several attractions worth visiting in the park, such as Mayan ruins, the Mexican Folklore Museum, the traditional Hacienda Henequenera estate and the Guadalupe Church. Las Coloradas Pink Lake Hidden away on the tip of Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula is a magical place full of color. These stunning cotton-candy pink lakes filled with salt are called Las Coloradas. The region is part of the Río Lagartos Biosphere Reserve, a protected wetlands area home to animals like flamingos, crocodiles, sea turtles, jaguars, and all kinds of sea birds. You may also have seen pictures of the breathtaking pink lakes, one of the most instagrammable spots in Mexico, through various social medias.

Cenote Hubiku

"Hubikú" means "Great Lord" and "Nest of Iguanas" in Mayan. It is located near Temozon in the Yucatan Peninsula. Cenote is a natural limestone cave, about 27 meters deep, almost circular in shape, with a diameter of about 50 meters. The water in the cave is clear. This is a natural "swimming pool" formed underground. Going down the stone steps, you can swim in the sapphire water. This is definitely a wonderful experience not to be missed. At noon, the sun shines directly from the top, like an angel with open arms, like a fairyland on earth.
